Among All These Tundras, a title taken from the poem 'My Home is in My Heart' by famed Sámi writer Nils-Aslak Valkeapää, features contemporary Indigenous artists from around the circumpolar world whose works poetically and politically express current Arctic concerns with an orientation towards land, language, sovereignty and resurgence. Artists from Indigenous nations located throughout the circumpolar north share histories of colonialism and experience its ongoing legacies, and are united in their desire to protect northern ecologies, languages, peoples and knowledge from the nefarious effects of climate change, global resource extraction, encroaching industry, and transnational competition. Together, these works invite viewers to contemplate relationships between textual and embodied Indigenous knowledge, innovation and sustainability, humour and resilience, and our collective responsibility to Arctic life and land.
